To whom it may concern,

I do not believe that the Microsoft judgement is correct or fair.

For years, Microsoft has used its monopoly in the software and web browser industry to force businesses and software products out of the market.

I could not find any piece of the judgement that will force Microsoft to pay for the crimes of the past.

They are simply restricted in how they can do future business.

This does not go far enough. Microsoft already has a monopoly in the market. They will not loose that monopoly just because they are not allowed to do or not do certain things, as spelled out in the judgement.

Microsoft should be broken into two companies. Or, at least fine them severly (something like 75% of their cash reserves and 10% of all sales for the next 5 years) and impose the current judgement.

Thank you for taking the time to read this.

Sincerely,
David Gill
